To Whom It May Concern:

Divyans Mahansaria worked in our group, The Data Center Program, during a semester at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as a special international student in the fall of 2009. He helped us develop the M Language, which is a tool to facilitate the integration of structure and unstructured information across the Internet. The project is currently funded by private enterprise and agencies of the United States government.

Divyans was tasked with expanding the vocabulary of the M Language by enumerating the various units of measure used in many diverse database schemas. He also developed corresponding software to test and validate his vocabulary extensions against existing standards. Divyans went well beyond expectations on his assigned tasks, and was awarded full credits for this project. Throughout my association with him, I found him enthusiastic, attentive, and industrious with great attention to detail.

He will be an asset to whatever academic or commercial opportunities he chooses to pursue.

Sincerely,

David L. Brock
